Independent clothing house

Digital case study / 2026

A clothing house. A digital point of view.

A website that invites a closer look at the clothes.

For MERCER VALE, we developed the digital presentation of a first collection, from reference research to a working interface. Large-scale photography, restrained typography and connected motion establish the direction.

The brief was to preserve the atmosphere of a fashion campaign while giving visitors a clear route to the looks, the house and a conversation.

From reference to a direction.

We reviewed the structure of ten clothing stores and the writing of five further brands. White Desert informed the composition through image scale, generous pauses and changes in framing.

We adapted those compositional principles to clothing: the collection sets the sequence, and editorial detail gives each photograph a purpose.

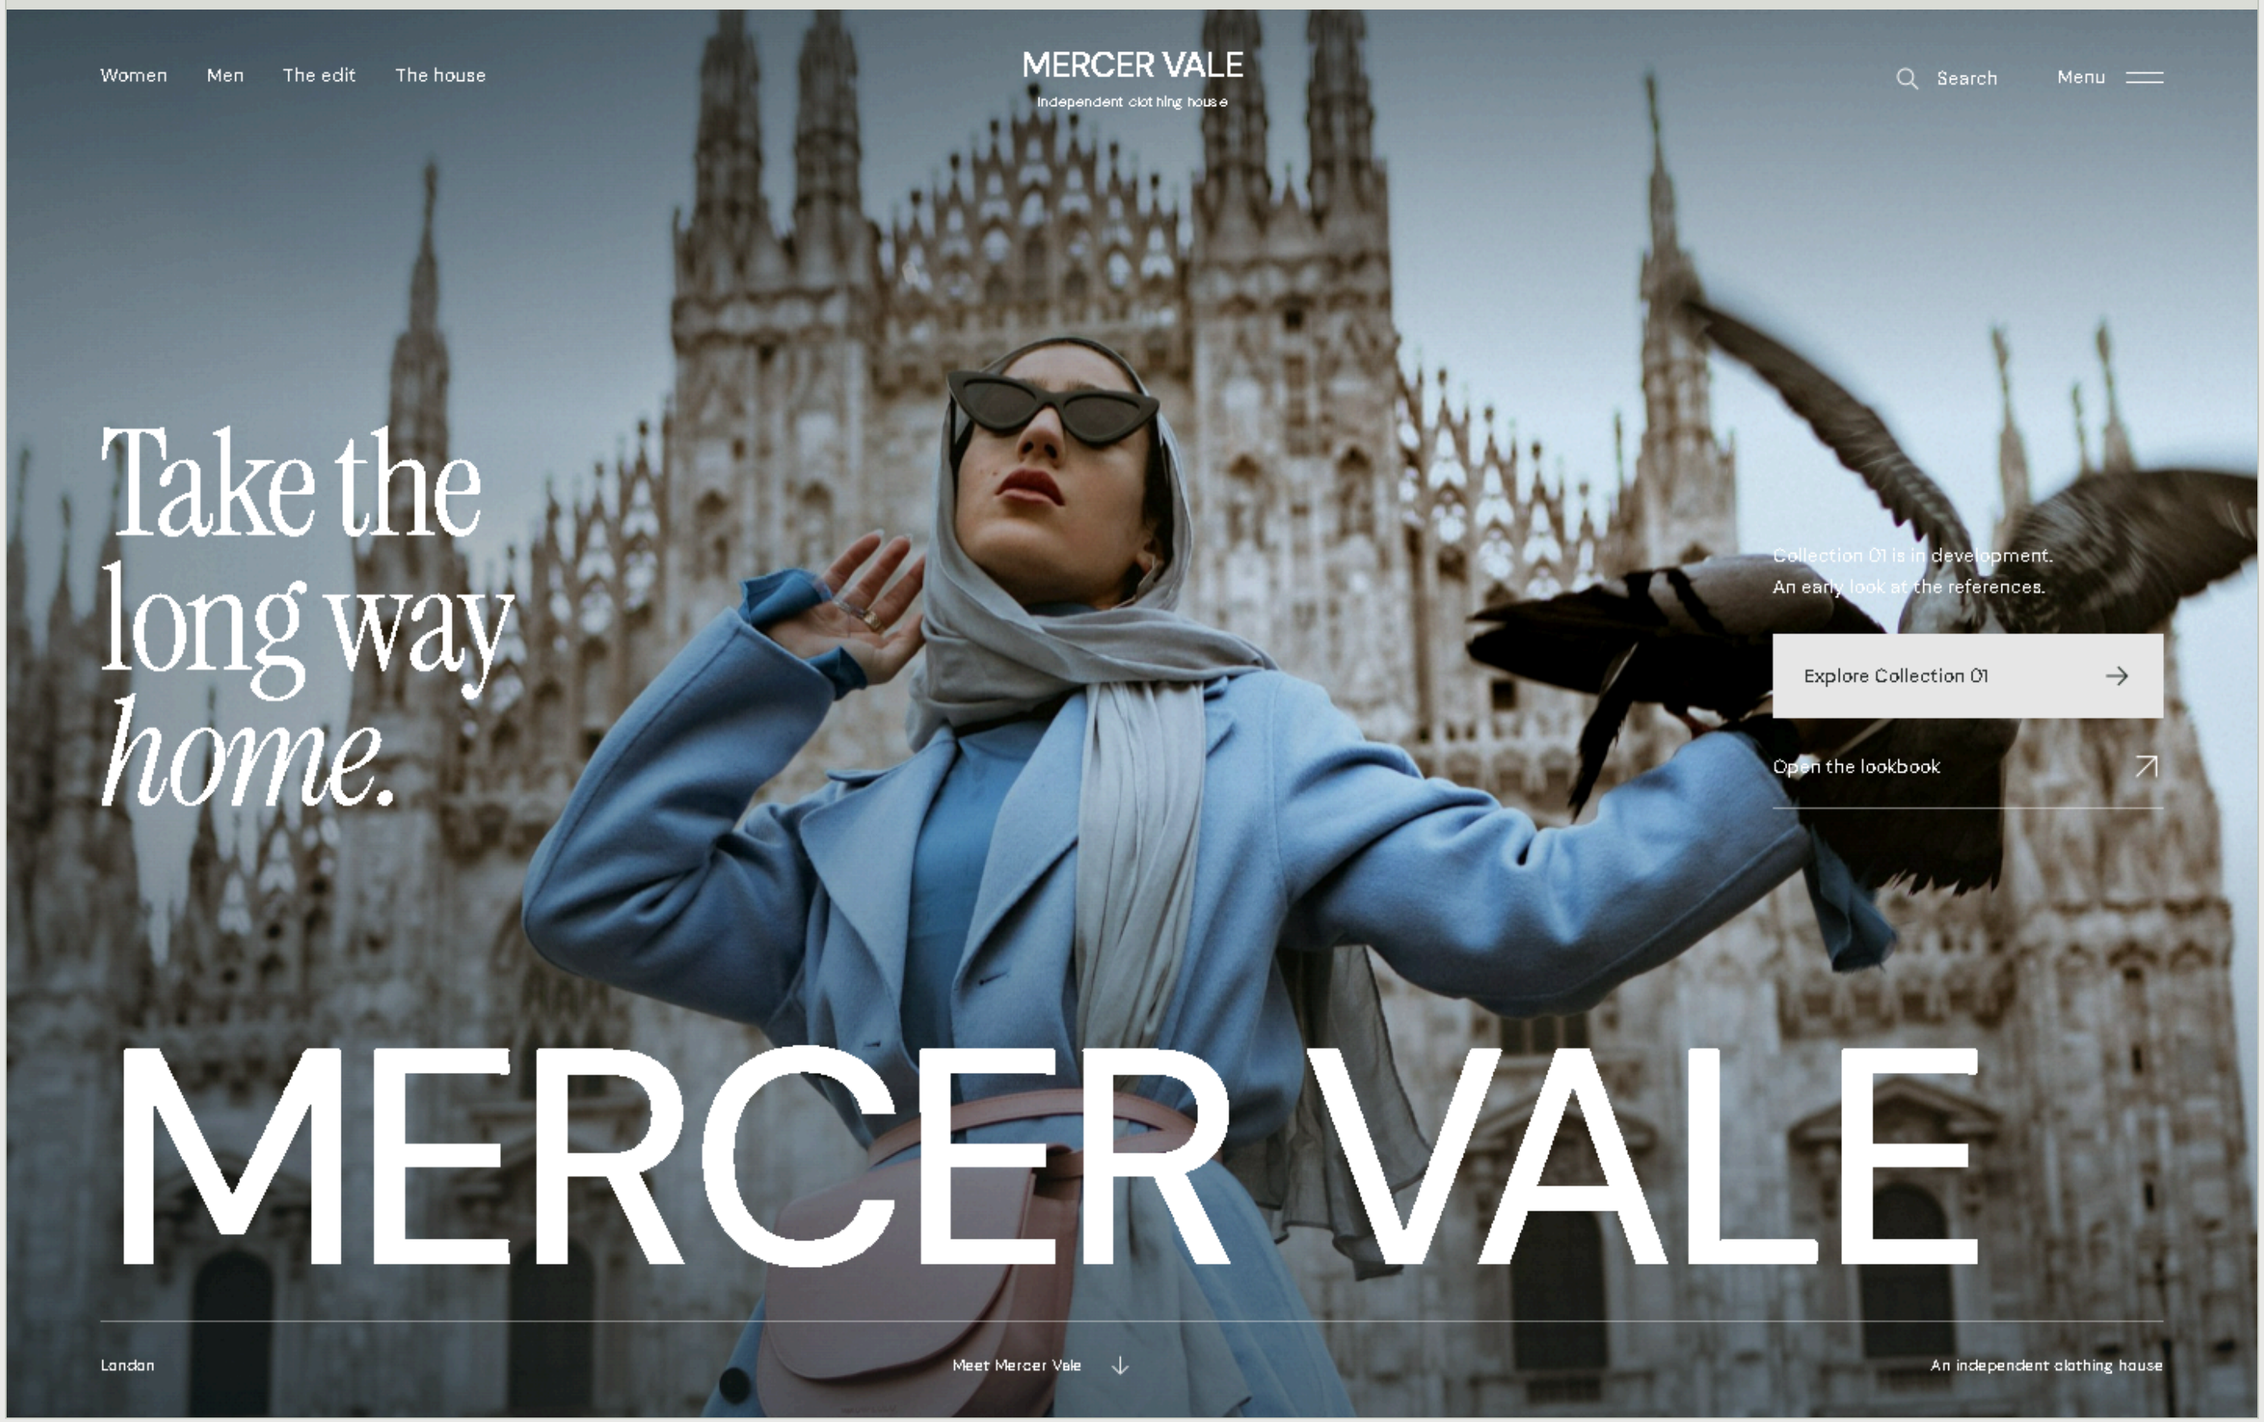

TOTEME	LEMAIRE	Studio Nicholson	ASKET	Everlane
The Frankie Shop	Our Legacy	A.P.C.	Acne Studios	GANNI
TOAST	Sunspel	mfpen	Margaret Howell	Private White V.C.

Campaign → Collection → The edit → The house → Questions → Contact

We moved the collection closer to the opening and added categories, search and a quick view, making it easier to move from the campaign into the clothes.

Clothing leads

The full-screen image establishes the house’s character. The headline and navigation sit around the subject of the photograph.

Two ways in

The collection is the primary route. The lookbook offers a direct way to explore the full photographic studies.

A clear hierarchy

Compact navigation, an editorial headline and an oversized wordmark at the foot of the screen give each level a distinct role.

Paper. Ink. A little blue.

Paper	Ink	Olive	Campaign blue
#E9E9E7	#232C29	#4B5145	#8EA8B6
Primary surface	Text and navigation	Selection and utility accents	Photographic tone, not a UI token

Cool paper gives the photography room. Dark text supports reading across the long page. Blue comes from the clothing in the campaign image.

Instrument Serif

Headlines / 400 / italic

An expressive serif gives the campaign its voice. Italic forms introduce a softer inflection within the restrained composition.

The long way home.

DM Sans

Wordmark / navigation / body copy

The sans serif carries the structure, from navigation and filters to short descriptions. Its direct forms leave the photograph in focus.

Room for the image

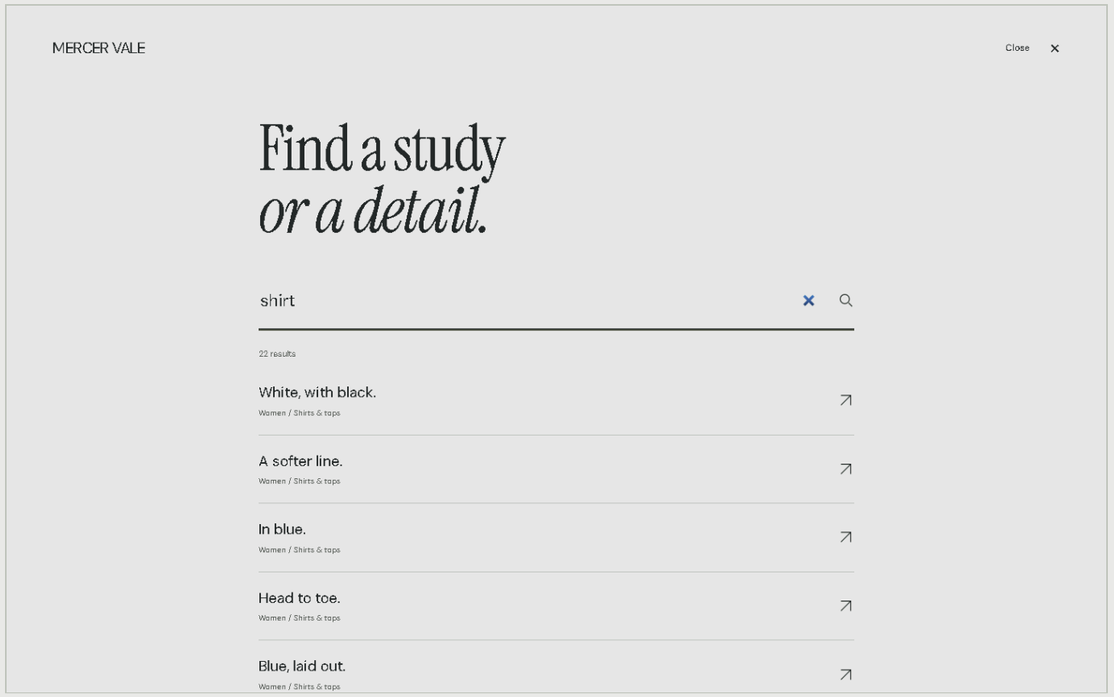

Specific language

Women and Men each contain three separate collections. Every tab opens eight photographs of its own: 48 distinct images, with no repeats between collections.

A full-length opening frame anchors an editorial grid of looks and details. The grid adapts to mobile while keeping the Women / Men selection visible.

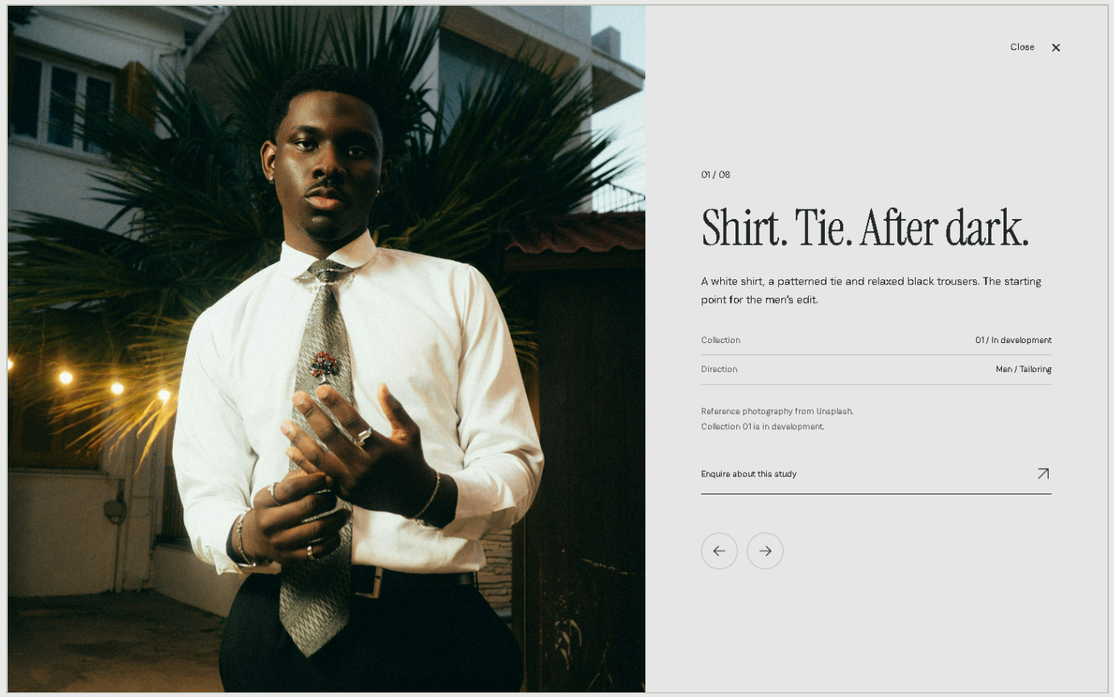

Outerwear, Shirts & tops, Knitwear and Tailoring name what visitors will find. The selected collection has its own heading, eight-image count and direct URL.

An interface that supports exploration

Search, with an answer.

Local search covers all 48 collection photographs and the page sections. A result opens its photograph inside the matching collection. An empty state suggests what to try next.

Room to look closer.

Each full-screen view stays within the selected collection's eight photographs. Descriptions and the position count follow the frame. Arrow keys navigate; Escape closes the view and restores focus.

Designed for the hand.

On mobile, scale, hierarchy and image behaviour change. The pinned photographic passage becomes a naturally scrolling frame, with touch controls within easy reach.

How we'd wear it.

A quiet way in.

The centred MERCER VALE wordmark sits above a thin progress bar on paper. Progress waits for the cover and fonts before completion, then the screen fades into the campaign. The opening can be skipped or replayed.

Arrival in the campaign

Headlines

Lines emerge through a mask with a short stagger between them.

Photography

The frame expands as it enters the viewport, with bounded image movement tied to native scrolling.

Accessibility

Reduced motion removes spatial effects. Content remains available with animation disabled.

Less promise. More observation.

Before

~~Room to be yourself.~~

A broad promise that could appear on almost any fashion website.

After

The white top.

A sleeveless white top with straight blue denim. Raw hems and dark sandals give the outfit a sharper finish.

We rewrote the English headlines, study descriptions, search, FAQ and contact copy around visible details and the collection’s current stage. Claims about fabrics, factories and durability require evidence before they can be published.

THE DELIVERABLE

Design, copy and a working interface

The first collection. Before the first order.

The result is a concept website for a clothing house, with its own visual direction, responsive composition and six distinct collections. Each contains eight photographs, with dedicated browsing, search and full-screen viewing.

Checks covered desktop and mobile layouts, all six collection tabs and every eight-image lookbook sequence, alongside search, keyboard access, loading and reduced motion. Sales impact has not been measured; the collection remains in development.
